Different Types of Botox

There are two main types of Botox: Type A and Type B. Type A Botox is the most common type used for cosmetic purposes. Type B Botox is less common and is typically used to treat certain medical conditions, such as cervical dystonia.

How Botox Works

Botox works by blocking the signals from the nerves to the muscles. This causes the muscles to relax and the wrinkles to soften. Botox typically takes effect within a few days and lasts for about three to four months.

What to Expect During a Botox Treatment

A Botox treatment is a relatively quick and painless procedure. The doctor will first clean the area to be treated and then inject Botox into the muscles. The injections may cause a slight stinging sensation. After the treatment, you may experience some redness, swelling, or bruising. These side effects typically subside within a few days.
