Background

The Siege of Jackson was part of Grant's Vicksburg Campaign, which began in April 1863. Grant's goal was to capture Vicksburg, Mississippi, which was a major Confederate stronghold on the Mississippi River. To do this, Grant needed to first capture Jackson, which was the capital of Mississippi and a major supply depot for the Confederate army.

The Siege

Grant's army arrived at Jackson on May 14, 1863. The city was defended by a Confederate force of about 10,000 men under the command of General Joseph E. Johnston. Johnston had constructed a series of fortifications around the city, and he was determined to hold out against Grant's forces.

Grant began his siege by shelling the city with artillery. He also sent troops to cut off the city's supply lines. Johnston's men fought back fiercely, but they were outnumbered and outgunned. On July 9, 1863, Johnston evacuated Jackson and retreated to the east.
